STACKED SPADES / Marion Smith / Commissioned by / The City of Edinburgh / District Council / 1994

Signatures: Bottom right, at back (incised): M 94

Physical Description: From the front view, five leaf-like spade forms rise progressively from the outside, with the central spade being the tallest. Their squared 'stalks' step back from the centre. The central 'leaf' and the two on the right are slightly concave, the two on the left are slightly convex. From the side view, the 'leaves' become solid volumes, and at the back they converge as two horizontal curving forms topped by a pod shape.

Physical Description: Four abstract grid rectangles of different sizes move in relation to each other, by means of two pairs of metal arms attached to the tops of three vertical square-sectioned supports. The verticals are linked by a horizontal cross piece about three metres from the ground, with the outer verticals buttressed by angled sections anchored in the concrete base.

Person or event commemorated: The name 'Strange Attractor' comes from quantum physics, and refers to a variety of ideas concerned with infinity within boundaries and dynamic balance. (1)
